WHICH FUTURE FOR BRITAIN'S CHILDREN?

A 'cohesion' of foreign cultures or traditional British values?

VISITS to local mosques are now on most school curriculums because Labour, Conservative and Lib-Dem run councils are forever pushing for the promotion of foreign religions and cultures on young British schoolchildren.

They do so because the 'Old Gang' political parties see the future of Britain as a melting pot of different nationalities with a 'cohesion' of foreign cultures. Labour, the Tories and Lib-Dems must have this agenda because in many council seats they depend on the votes of the ethnic minorities to keep them in control. The British National Party believes in promoting traditional British values and British culture such as this Easter bonnet parade in Broxtowe, organised by local BNP councillors.

On Thursday 1st May, you can decide which future you want for Britain's children. It's an important vote because time is running out and in another few years there may not be a choice.

It's YOUR choice on May 1st

'Old Gang' parties play the Polish card in scramble for votes

WITH traditional Londoners now turning to the British National Party in ever-increasing numbers, the 'Old Gang' parties are having to look elsewhere for votes to boost their flagging fortunes in the GLA elections on May 1st. And it is no surprise that Labour, the Tories and the Liberal Democrats are targeting London's immigrant communities in the search for votes, with top of all their lists - the capital's rapidly expanding Polish population. There are now 180,000 more European Union citizens registered to vote in this year's poll than there were at the last GLA election in 2004, and London Elects, the body that oversees London elections, has launched a campaign to get people from Eastern Europe to register for a vote. Wiktor Moszczynski of the Federation of Poles in Great Britain said that the Polish vote would be crucial with many Poles supporting Labour because "... it was a Labour government which opened the border for them to come here."

NOT JUST POLES: Turks and South Asians are also encouraged to vote.

POLISH VOTES: Diluting the influence of true Londoners in their own city.

dates are also playing the Polish card. Ken Livingstone organised a party for Poles at City Hall and is promising a celebration of Polish culture in Trafalgar Square. Boris Johnson has met Polish community leaders, and Brian Paddick has been courting the Polish media. As Labour, the Tories and the Liberal Democrats scramble for the immigrant vote, traditional Londoners are pledging their support for the British National Party and our mayoral candidate Richard Barnbrook. This rise in support has appeared for the first time in opinion polls which now put the BNP on 5% in London. The pollsters acknowledge that people are wary of admitting an intention of voting for the British National Party and the head of one of the leading polling companies believes that the real BNP rating is probably double that which appears in the polls.

Righteous anger & political action

THE British National Party believes in telling the plain truth, even if it is sometimes uncomfortable to hear or even offensive to those who would rather bury their heads in the sand than face real problems in our society.

But while we often pass quite critical comment on the impact of immigration, multiculturalism and alien religions on the indigenous people of our lands, we have no animosity towards immigrants, their descendants or the followers of non-native religions. Nor do we intend to encourage others to feel such animosity, or believe that anything we have to say is likely to 'stir up hatred' against anyone. In fact, we believe that by providing a peaceful and constitutional outlet for the anger and the frustration felt by millions of our people over the undemocratic transformation of our country by our political masters, the BNP actually defuses tensions. Where there is 'hate' we seek to turn it into righteous anger and political action against the only people who deserve to be hated - the politicians who use our taxes to turn our country into a place where we often feel like strangers in our own land.

Labour lies about superbug death toll

THE Government is lying about the true death toll caused by superbugs in our hospitals and it is failing to reduce infection rates, leaving our hospitals amongst the most germ-infested in Europe.

"Antibiotic-resistant bacteria are now so well established here that we will never get rid of them." That's the warning from leading bacteriologist Professor Hugh Pennington of Aberdeen University. Professor Mark Enright, a top molecular epidemiologist at Imperial College London, accused the Government of understating the actual death toll from the superbugs, notably Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) and Clostridium difficile (C difficile).

"A lot of people are never tested for these infections and their deaths are put down to something else" he said.

In other advanced Western countries, strict cleanliness and hygiene measures have kept superbug infection rates low, but in Britain the situation is out of control. In 2004 the Government pledged to halve MRSA infection rates but it was just more New Labour spin - the reality is that more patients, especially the elderly, are leaving hospital with the infection.

In a league table of superbug infection rates containing 31 European countries, Britain is now 27th, ahead only of Malta, Greece, Portugal and Romania.

More Labour lies about immigration

THE findings of the House of Lords Economic Committee inquiry into immigration has exposed yet more lies from this Labour Government.

The report concludes that immigration is not of economic benefit to Britain - something that the BNP has been consistently saying since the Party was founded in 1980.

It says that the Government's key claim that immigration increases Britain's overall gross domestic product (GDP) is "irrelevant and misleading" and that the real issue is whether immigration has boosted income per head of population. Its conclusion is that the effects on per capita income are "very small whether positive or negative".

So Labour has allowed 3 million immigrants to settle in Britain since 1997, placing huge strains on our public services leading to tensions within our communities, and it has all been for nothing.

The Government claims it has encouraged immigration to provide Britain with a "dynamic, vibrant and diverse society."

The British National Party says Labour has encouraged immigration because immigrants vote Labour, provide a never-ending supply of cheap labour and cover-up the Government's failures over the education and training of Britain's own workforce.

Consecutive Labour and Tory

Governments have tried to stifle any debate on immigration. They branded the BNP as racists for daring to voice the public's concern and refused to even appear with BNP candidates at election time to stop the issue being debated at the hustings.

For a time this intimidation worked. A Newsnight poll of white British adults found that 77% felt that they could not criticise immigration without being labelled racist - but now, thankfully, the political climate in Britain is changing.

On May 1st voters will be able to give their verdict on Labour and the Tories' failed immigration policies of the past fifty years.

Croydon Advertiser

Editor admits interfering in GLA election

THE editor of the Croydon Advertiser has admitted that he is personally interfering in the democratic process by denying the readers of his newspaper the opportunity of hearing all of the viewpoints of the candidates standing in the London Assembly elections.

Ian Carter has turned down a request for advertising space from the British National Party, despite saying he will accept political adverts from all the other parties. "The BNP are a legitimate political party and will argue that they should have the same right as the others. But I've turned them away on the basis I'd feel uncomfortable with any of their material appearing in our publications," he told the Hold the Front Page website.

IAN CARTER: Unelected censor for Croydon

Quite what right Ian Carter, a former BBC journalist (surprise, surprise), has to deem which political viewpoint Croydon Advertiser readers are to be given access to, is debatable. For many people in Croydon it will sound rather like personal censorship by someone unelected and whose own personal political leanings are kept well hidden from the public.

Let's hope the people of Croydon react to Ian Carter's personal censorship in the traditional British manner and stop buying the Croydon Advertiser.

Labour says BNP support in GLA is "scary"

THE British National Party has received a morale boost from a rather unexpected source in the run-up to the Greater London Assembly elections.

The Labour Party's Ruth Smeeth, who is organising yet another campaign against the BNP in London, has made a pretty good analysis of the BNP's chances in the capital. She reports:

"The BNP has grown in strength in the last 10 years. They have candidates standing for the GLA for the first time and councillors for re-election. They could take as many as three seats in London.

"The London election is scary because, if the voting levels remain the same, they will need only an extra 5,000 votes to win a seat." She added: "The last elections clashed with European elections, but not this time. Then, the UK Independence Party got 11 per cent, but now it has collapsed and the BNP could capture that vote."

BNP win again in Havering with an increased majority

MARK LOGAN: Community worker.

GOOSHAYS: "It's snowing but we don't care" that seems to be the message from Mark Logan and his team after their stunning victory.

HAVERING COUNCIL

Gooshays Ward

Thursday 20th March 2008

| Mark Logan (BNP) | 865 |
| Yve Cornell (Lab) | 741 |
| Malcolm Fox (Con) | 489 |
| Lawrence Webb (UKIP) | 70 |

| Ian Sanderson (Lib-Dem) | 52 |
| BNP Percentage | 38.0% |

IT WAS the first time that there had been local council elections held on Maundy Thursday and it proved first time lucky for the British National Party.

Until recently it was a day which was not counted in the election process because it was just before a public holiday and as such might have effected the turnout, but voters went to the polls in significant numbers in Gooshays ward in the London borough of Havering to give Mark Logan and his dedicated BNP campaign team a stunning victory.

Not only did the BNP hold on to this ward in a by-election this was a resignation of a BNP councillor, something the Party has only been able to do on one other occasion, but we increased our vote by nearly 10% to secure a 38% vote share. And it was that share of the vote that gave the Party such a huge morale boost. The ward had been pencilled in as a 20-25% vote share in the BNP's grand strategy to gain representation on the GLA, and the vote came in with an extra 13%.

It was also significant that the near 10% increase in the BNP vote from May 2006, comes in the main from the UKIP candidate whose vote collapsed by nearly 8%.

The retiring British National Party councillor, Alan Bailey, stood down because family and work responsibilities meant he couldn't devote as much time to his councillor duties as he would have wished.

Alan could have continued as a councillor, just taking the money, without doing the work, but representatives of the British National Party have a sense of honour and of responsibility and therefore would not defraud the electorate in the way the other parties do.

It is a well-known fact that the parties which cause by-elections are normally punished by the electorate, but the BNP needn't have worried.

Candidate Mark Logan, has lived in Havering for the last 25 years and the father of three, who works as a contracts manager in the construction industry, is a tireless community worker and the voters of Gooshays ward were well aware of this.

Labour's £100,000 rates fraud exposed in Burnley

BURNLEY Labour Party has ripped off the town's taxpayers to the tune of £100,000 and used the money for political campaigning.

Back in 1990, Burnley Labour Party was given charitable status by the then Labour-run Burnley Council so it could claim a 75% rates reduction on its Victoria Street offices in the town centre. This rates relief scandal only came to light when Liberal Democrats tried to engage in a similar scam for their new political offices.

Councillor Sharon Wilkinson, British National Party leader on Burnley Council said it was typical of the Labour Party to show such contempt for the people of the town:

"The Labour Party should never have qualified as a charity and been able to claim the rates relief in the first place.

"For the last eighteen years the council taxpayers of Burnley have been subsidising the Labour Party and I don't know how they have got away with it for so long.

"They will have to pay ALL this money back because they got it under false pretences.

"They are making all these statements about council tax rises and the budget yet they have been doing this all the time.

"No wonder they have been able to finance expensive campaigns against the British National Party - they have been using taxpayers' money to do it."

Fearing a backlash in the local elections in May, Labour MP Kitty Ussher, who is now the lead tenant at the three-storey complex, said she was unaware of the arrangement and has offered to repay the relief incurred on the premises since she entered Parliament in 2005, but that alone probably won't be enough to placate voters.

BNP take 2nd place from Labour in Northants poll

THE British National Party recorded its second highest percentage for a Northamptonshire local election and its highest place in the Redwell West ward by-election for Wellingborough Council.

But what made this result even more remarkable was that it was achieved in the face of an extremely high turnout for a local by-election of 47.1%, something our opponents tell us reduces BNP support at the polls.

"There was no way that we could have won this election and at the beginning of the day we were expecting to come third with around 10% of the vote," Wellingborough BNP contact Rob Walker, told Freedom.

to irritate voters.

The result was achieved on the back of a three leaflet campaign and a full canvassing sweep.

David Robinson, who led the British National Party's effort from the front, was very pleased with his vote and with the hard work of his election team which maximised the BNP vote.

'The Times' stumbles on our Quiet Revolution

THE British National Party's vote in the by-election in Redwell West was reported in The Times in an article by Tim Hames entitled "Prepare for a shock BNP victory".

It detailed the BNP's fortunes in recent local elections and came to the conclusion that "the stealth success of the BNP could be the real story of the local elections."

The Times goes on to acknowledge that "the BNP has improved its organisation", that it is "honing a much more sophisticated approach to campaigning" and that "the quality of its leaflets has improved."

So at last one of the main media players has stumbled upon the BNP's Quiet Revolution and is predicting that it could become a lot noisier in the run-up to polling day on May 1st.

Quote of the month

"At some point, we are going to have to say that Britain is a lifeboat. If any more people come on board then we will sink."

"If we get it wrong, you will have ghastly encampments like Darfur. People will be smuggling their way in and setting up camps. Ethnic communities will want to help them and civil war will start."

Dr James Lovelock,
Daily Mail
22nd March 2008.

Deport them without bribes

THE Labour Government has increased its "bribe" to foreign criminals to encourage them to return to their own countries.

Originally introduced by John Reid when he was Home Secretary in 2006, the bribe has more than trebled from the £800 then, to the current payment of £3000.

The Government says the incentives are necessary because each foreign prisoner deported saves the British taxpayer £100 a day.

The British National Party says these foreign criminals shouldn't be in our prisons in the first place - they should have been deported as soon as they committed a crime on British soil.

Elderly at risk to save New Labour blushes

A leaked Home Office report has revealed that hundreds of illegal immigrants, including those with criminal records are working in care homes in Britain. The report was prompted more than two years ago when a number of carers investigated for the abuse and mistreatment of their elderly patients, were found to be illegal immigrants.

Whistleblowers say the report was mothballed because its findings embarrassed the Government.

Desperate opponents look to prison for anti-BNP votes

ONE of the main planks in the opposition's campaign against the British National Party in the run-up to the May elections is a series of music concerts under the banner of 'Rock Against Racism'.

The programme of events kicked off with a gig at Brixton Prison at the end of last month where inmates were told about the anti-PC nature of the BNP in wanting to stop immigration, as well as a selection of songs about being in prison. The afternoon jolly was the idea of prison governor Paul McDowell, in an effort to rally support against the BNP for the GLA and Mayoral elections. Apparently McDowell, who says he is committed to fighting the BNP, believes that Brixton's 800 prisoners from 60 nationalities most of whom are on remand and entitled to a vote, will want to use it to try to nullify support for the British National Party at the ballot box.

It's another desperate measure by anti-BNP groups to try to generate votes in London in an effort to nullify the growing support for the BNP.

The leaflets they put out telling people to vote for any political party other than the BNP, do appear in some elections, to have had the very opposite effect with an electorate cynical of the motives of mainstream politicians disinclined to do their bidding.

Now we have Rock Against Racism targeting prisoners on remand, a move which will hardly encourage support from the public in general whose main concern is rising crime in their communities. This, together with the campaign being fronted by the media disaster Pete Doherty and champagne socialist Billy Bragg, must limit somewhat the appeal to the general public of this 'musical' attack on the British National Party.

GATE FEVER: "I've got to get out of here and use my vote to stop the British National Party gaining seats in the GLA elections."

Save our flag from New Labour spin

IN A desperate bid to shore up the crumbling national identity and social cohesion of the multicultural mess they have created, the Government has announced that public buildings, including schools, hospitals and jobcentres, are to be encouraged to fly the Union Flag more often.

Restrictions limiting public buildings to flying the flag on only 18 days a year, introduced in 1924, are to be lifted. As are rules prescribing that the Union Flag must have precedence over the English, Welsh, and Scottish flags. Ulster is not included in these changes, presumably so as not to offend the Irish Republic.

Our national flag has already suffered decades of indignity being waved around at Tory conferences, while that Party's leaders were systematically shrinking the area of the world over which it flew and subordinating it to the tacky yellow stars on blue of Brussels rule.

Now the flag that once floated proudly over a quarter of the Earth is to be stuck up over dole offices in multiracial slums by Labour as a fig leaf to cover the disintegration of our nationhood and its dissolution in the globalised market economy.

The flag has been flown with pride by Nelson and the Few, and in recent years by those carrying on their fight for national survival in the ranks of the BNP. Now the very people who despise the traditions, the pride and the patriotism for which it stands are seeking to hijack it for their own political ends.

St George's Day Parade axed

WIGAN'S annual St George's Day parade has been axed for the first time in its 60-year history.

The annual walk round the town centre by Scouts, Guides, Cubs and Brownies has been abandoned because of fears for the children's safety after the Police said they were unable to protect the marchers because of the cost of the operation.

It is unclear who the Police would actually have to protect the youngsters, celebrating this traditional English festival, from.

Arranged marriages investigator suspended

A FORMER police inspector who exposed the scandal of forced arranged marriages in Bradford has been suspended.

Police support worker Philip Balmforth, was removed from his duties after alerting the authorities to the increasing number of Muslim girls, some as young as 13, who were going missing from schools in the city.

West Yorkshire Police, which has investigated 176 forced marriages in the past 12 months, suspended Mr Balmforth after a complaint from Bradford council, where officials were unhappy with his "persistent" investigations into arranged marriages.

No new life or identity for little Jamie Bulger

ON February 12th 1993, three year-old Jamie Bulger was taken from a Liverpool shopping centre by two 10-year-old boys.

He left his mother's side for just a second, but that was long enough for Jon Venables to take his hand and lead him away to his death.

Together with Robert Thompson, Jon Venables took Jamie on a three mile trek, stopping every now and again to torture the little boy who was crying for his mummy.

Finally they stopped at a railway track where they brutally kicked him, threw stones at him, rubbed paint into his eyes, and tried to cut off his fingers with a pair of scissors. They then left his tiny battered body on the tracks so a train could run him over to hide their crime.

These two boys understood what they had done was wrong and that's why they tried to make it look like an accident.

Venables and Thompson were found guilty of murder at Preston Crown Court on November 24, 1993. The trial judge sentenced them to be detained at HerMajesty's pleasure, with a recommendation that they should be kept in custody for "very, very many years".

Yet shortly after the trial, Lord Taylor of Gosforth, the Lord Chief Justice, stepped in and ordered that the two boys should serve just ten years, which would have made them eligible for release in February 2003.

JAMIE BULGER: He was subjected to a terrifying ordeal before being left for dead on a railway line.

In fact they were released two years earlier than his recommendation on a life licence in June 2001.

An injunction was imposed shortly after the trial, preventing the publication of details about the boys. The injunction has remained in force following their release, so that details of their new identities could not be published.

Just last month Lady Justice Butler-Sloss awarded Venables and Thompson anonymity for the rest of their lives so that they can settle in Australia without any unwelcome intrusion by the media.

There can be no new life or identity for little Jamie Bulger. After what they did to him, Venables and Thompson should never have been released from prison, let alone provided with the where-with-all to live a relatively normal life.

At last a voice in defence of a Christian Britain

ALISON RUOFF:
A member of the General Synod.

A SENIOR member of the Church of England has called for a ban on the building of more mosques in Britain.

Alison Ruoff, a member of the General Synod, said that new mosques should not be built in this country, adding: "If we don't watch out, we will become an Islamic state. It's that serious." But this voice from the wilderness in defence of a Christian Britain was immediately attacked by Inayat Bunglawala, the assistant secretary general of the Muslim Council of Britain. He said: "These are very bigoted and, frankly, xenophobic remarks. These comments you would expect to come from someone from the BNP not the Church."

KILLERS: Why should Thompson and Venables be allowed a new life when they so cruelly took away that of Jamie Bulger's?

ELECTION 08 APPEAL

The British National Party is on the verge of a major breakthrough into mainstream politics. In May, if the BNP can achieve another good set of local election results and gain representation on the Greater London Assembly we shall be able to claim to have well and truly arrived at the centre of Britain's political arena.

But to win against the old gang parties in such fiercely contested elections needs considerable funding and we are appealing for your help as the BNP makes this vital push for power in order to save our country.

What We Stand for

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the £billion wasted in foreign aid to fund 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the European Union for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union to restore Britain's freedom. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside. A ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need, an end to field trials of GM crops, and the restoration of our 200 mile fishing limit.

FAIR PLAY FOR ENGLAND: The setting up of an English Parliament to give England the same right of self-determination within the United Kingdom as enjoyed by Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A major expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The introduction of referenda and direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Forces and cost jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last policy. Like all the other democratic political parties, the British National Party includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of Labour, the Tories and the Lib-Dems. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

Banks will make you pay for their mistakes

IT WAS their own greed that got the big banks into the sub-prime lending credit crunch crisis, but now they want us to pay for their mistake.

British homeowners will be paying an estimated £1.3billion a year extra as a result of the banks ramping up their profit margins on mortgages to offset their losses.

New figures, released at Easter, show that Britain's banks have massively increased the margin between the rate at which they borrow money from each other and the rate at which they lend it to us.

In 2007, a homeowner with a two-year fixed rate deal would typically have paid an interest rate just 0.2% higher than the rate at which the bank itself borrowed the money. That mark-up has now increased to over 1.6%, an eightfold increase in their profits. Even though Bank of England interest rates are going down, 1.4 million British householders whose fixed rate deals end this year will face bigger monthly mortgage bills.

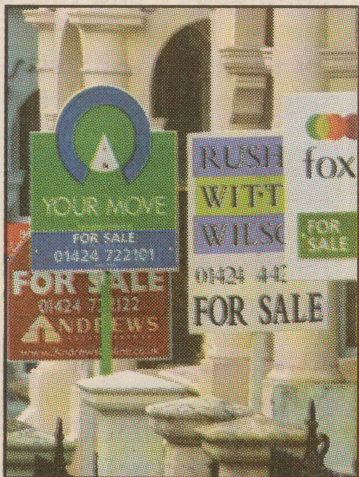

Consumer groups have accused banks of plundering homeowners. As Eddy Weatherill, Chief Executive of the Independent Banking Advisory Service put it:

"They all got into this position and now the customer is going to pay for it".

People who lend money they haven't got and borrow more money on the basis of bad debts and wild gambles cunningly concealed within accounting dodges should end up in jail.

In Gordon Brown's 'New Labour' Britain they get knighthoods.

In the British National Party's Britain there will be only one bank, run by and for the British people and the crooked bankers and other City sharks that have ripped us all off will be where they belong - sewing mailbags in prison.

MORTGAGES: More expensive.

LAST month the world's central banks pumped £140billion of liquidity into global markets.

In America, the US Federal Reserve offered $140billion in secured Government bonds in exchange for packages of American mortgages held by banks in trouble because of the credit crunch, which is in effect part-nationalising the mortgage market there. So now if someone defaults on one of those mortgages, it's the American taxpayer that foots the bill, not the bank which lent the money.

Here, the Bank of England made £10billion available for banks unable to raise funds because of concerns over their viability to continue in business, and said it would consider providing another £10billion next month.

Remember that this is your money being used to bail out private banks that have got into trouble because in their greed for higher returns they lent their money unwisely.

What is happening here is that money is being created rather than earned and that will bring the whole system crashing down. The first rule of good banking is that if a bank makes ill-advised loans it should have to pay the penalty for that bad judgement. The credibility of the banking system is built

Days of credit card escapism are numbered

on sound investment, so if bad banks are propped up, then confidence in the system is eroded.

These desperate measures are being taken in a last ditch effort to maintain the supply of easy credit on which the growth of the global economy depends - but it is doomed to failure and that is something that should be welcomed by nationalists in every country across the globe.

Easy credit has certainly been the worst enemy of the people of this country. It has encouraged Britons to look inwards, to feather their own little comfort zone with material goods and luxury services, insulating themselves from the reality of what is happening in Britain today.

The awakening of the British people will spread across the country in direct response to the decline in the availability of easy credit.

Once again money will have to be earned again and the fact that migrant workers are taking the lion's share of the jobs available will become THE political issue of the day. Then there will only be one political party that will have the policies that the British people will be demanding - the British National Party.

EU seeks to close UK winery

MORE petty regulations have been imposed by the tyrannical EU, this time hitting an award winning winemaker.

The Lurgashall Winery in West Sussex faces a bill of £30,000 to make changes to its production line because under new EU directive 2007/45/EC, which was drawn up last September, their bottles are now illegal, being the wrong shape and volume. The winery currently sells its produce in 75cl and 37.5cl bottles. The new European Union rules state that such products must only be sold in 70cl or 35cl bottles.

Now the firm faces prosecution for "illegal" bottles which shows just how far the EU is prepared to go to destroy our traditions.

Tories to blame for immigrant clematis

HOT on the heels of British jobs being taken by Polish immigrants, we now have British garden plants under threat from East European species.

Our traditional Clematis plants are now being rapidly displaced by Polish varieties such as the Lech Walesa, General Sikorski and the Jan Pawell II.

In addition, most trees sold as native species now actually originate now from East Europe. Included in these examples are so-called English Oaks, which have mostly been grown from acorns gathered in Poland and other East European countries. The total retail value of this market is around £5billion per year and it is estimated that 90% of the plants on sale over the Easter period had come from overseas.

It is also feared that the introduction of foreign reared plants will be detrimental to our wildlife, being genetically different to and coming into leaf and flower earlier than native types.

The massive reduction in the once-thriving British market garden research and plant breeding industry came about in the 1980s when Margaret Thatcher's Tory Government slashed their funding.

Of course, those profiting from this trade in non-British plants claim that gardeners are "offered more choice".

But what a price to pay for that 'more choice' - the demise of our own growers and the destruction of our wildlife.

Enriching our culture?

A SOMALI immigrant has brought to Britain what is believed to be the first ever case in Britain of a virtually untreatable strain of tuberculosis.

The man, understood to be an asylum seeker in his 30s who arrived in Britain last year, is in isolation at the Gartnavel General Hospital in Glasgow and being treated with a range of antibiotics to control the disease.

But he has been diagnosed with the XDR-TB strain, which kills half of those infected and is extremely resistant to drugs used to fight more common forms of the infection. Domestic cases of tuberculosis, an airborne disease which is spread through close contact with other people, are increasing but it is thought this is the first time the most deadly type has been found in this country.

Say TATA to any future for Britain's motor industry

AS Freedom predicted six months ago, the once proud British carmakers of Jaguar and Land Rover have been flogged off on the cheap by their American owner, Ford, to Indian conglomerate Tata.

Labour politicians and trade union leaders claim the deal will "save the jobs of West Midlands carmakers" but it won't. It will, in fact, herald the end of Britain's motor industry.

Make no mistake, Tata isn't buying up these production plants and prestigious marques out of any charitable concern for the welfare of the 19,000 Britons who work for them, and the tens of thousands more in the Midlands and Merseyside areas whose livelihoods depend on supplying those plants and their workers.

Tata already has 290,000 employees in 80 countries and a net worth of £35 billion, Jaguar and Land Rover are just very small pawns in a very big game.

It intends to build up India's vehicle industry into a global player and have already launched the Nano, at £1250, the world's cheapest family car on the road. But to move into prestige carmaking and the off-road SUV market, they need specialist know-how and strong brands which they have just bought themselves with Jaguar and Land Rover.

BRITISH ICONS: Now gone, along with any future for our car industry, to India.

They don't need car workers - India plans to have 25 million of its own by 2016 and all paid a fraction of what workers in West Bromwich or Halewood earn.

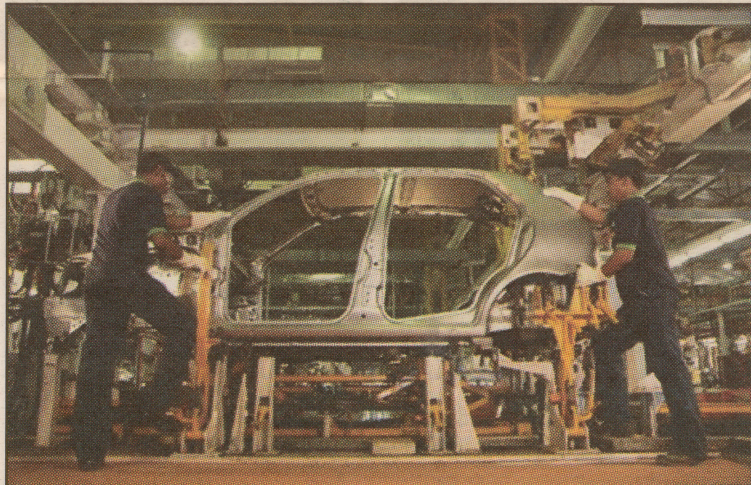

Tata will just cream off the top designers and shift bulk production to low-cost India, all the while incorporating British design ideas into the rest of their vehicle range. Indeed, even in Britain they have already funded one of their fellow Indians, Kumar Bhattacharyya, to turn the engineering department of Warwick University, which should be training British engineers, into the "Warwick Manufacturing Group" to design cars for India.

It is just a matter of time before the next generation of Jags and Land Rovers start pouring off the assembly lines in Madras and Bombay whilst cheap small cars made in India with British ideas picked out of the carcasses of Castle Bromwich and Halewood start flooding off the boats at Portbury and Avonmouth.

It is then that our car workers will remember that while the Labour Government and trade union leaders hailed the Tata takeover as a triumph, it was the BNP alone that warned that it was the road to disaster.

A road down which the once world-leading British motor industry has been driven by the Tories and Labour alike, so that while countries like Germany and Japan, with economies of comparable size to ours, have their national, and native-owned, motor industries, ours is now reduced to being flogged off for scrap to the Third World.

INDIA: Car workers are ready for the next generation of 'Jags' and Land Rovers.

Vulcan Project - Saving a British icon on the RAF's 90th anniversary

AVRO VULCAN: A British delta wing subsonic bomber that was operated by the Royal Air Force from 1953 until 1984.

FOR the last ten years a team of enthusiasts have been working on returning an icon of British heritage to public display.

The Avro Vulcan is a British delta wing subsonic bomber that was operated by the Royal Air Force from 1953 until 1984.

It was part of the RAF's V bomber force, which fulfilled the role of nuclear deterrence against the Soviet Union during the Cold War. It was also used in a conventional bombing role during the Falklands conflict with Argentina.

With the RAF celebrating 90 years since its formation it would be fitting if the the Avro Vulcan V-Bomber, which last flew in 1992, was able to fly again at Britain's 5 full RAF shows this year. The Vulcan, which carries the same engine as a Concorde, is a worthwhile restoration to flight project as it will be a source of education to our children, in British science, engineering and history.

But since October 2007, vital funding and sponsorship has eluded the project team. The aircraft currently sits in a Leicestershire hangar, fully flight-ready, unable to appear at UK airshows this year due to a cash shortage.

The project faces being closed down and the extensive education programme built around this incredible machine lost unless £150,000 can be raised to ensure its survival.

The Avro Vulcan V-Bomber is a national heritage asset, a vital part of the industrial and military history of this country and it should be restored and maintain for the nation. Perhaps Gordon Brown could keep back just £150,000 from the £800million he is giving India in foreign aid this year to ensure the future of this project?

JODRELL BANK: One of seven radio telescope dishes linked across the country.

Labour cuts threaten future of Jodrell Bank

GORDON Brown and his Government continue to show utter contempt for Britain's achievements and leading role in the world of science and technology, this time by slashing £2.5million of funding for the country's network of astronomy dishes which includes the Jodrell Bank site.

The network e-MERLIN, which is the upgraded form of the Multi-Element Radio Linked Interferometer Network, has seven radio telescope dishes based in different parts of England. It is these dishes, which receive the signals from space simultaneously, that make the system so effective. Almost £8million has been spent in recent years on maintenance and improvements, but now it seems that this money has been wasted.

The cut in the funding could lead to the loss of these facilities, leaving other countries to forge ahead with research and discoveries. Britain, which was once the leader in this field, is yet again the loser, thanks to New Labour.

It's Brussels that is behind the Post Office closures

WHEN THE treaty of Amsterdam was signed in 1997 it signaled the end of Britain's post offices.

Article 88 of this treaty forced our Government to seek permission from the European Union to give state aid to the Post Office. In 2003 a subsidy was agreed which would last until March 2008 and that is why the Government must now axe 3,000 post offices - because Brussels bureaucrats have said we must.

It is the European Union that wants the end of our post offices and our politicians haven't the courage to tell the British people the truth of this or stand up to the EU bullies.

Those MPs who voted with the Government for the closure programme and then make disingenuous statements about fighting to keep the post offices in their own constituency open are hypocrites and only deserve the British people's contempt.

FIRST MEETING: Brian Mahoney, Regional Organiser for Wales is guest speaker.

BNP launches election effort in West Wales

THE first meeting of the newly formed Ammanford BNP group took place at a venue in the small Carmarthenshire town on Saturday 15th March. Now this was the afternoon of the all important Wales vs France game with Wales in line for the Grand Slam having already won the Triple Crown. So the new BNP unit were more than happy with an excellent turnout of members and supporters who heard speeches from Ammanford organiser Kevin Edwards and Mike Green the Fund Holder, as well as the regional Organiser for Wales Brian Mahoney.

The meeting heard that although the Ammanford group has only been in existence for a short while it would be contesting wards in the town at the elections in May. The election campaign in the town started just one week later with over 1000 locally produced West Wales Patriot leaflets handed out in the high street.

"We also handed out the Where We Stand BNP policy leaflets and there wasn't any adverse reaction, in fact most responses were very positive and complimentary," Kevin Edwards told Freedom.

"Local people are so disenchanted with those who are supposed to represent them. Many feel that they are being taken for a ride," he said.

AMMANFORD: Kevin Edwards hands out West Wales Patriot leaflets

NW LEICS: Ian Meller briefs the meeting on his council work.

New BNP unit hears of the lies and betrayal of Labour and the Tories

AFTER gaining its independence from Leicestershire BNP at the end of last year, the new unit of North West Leicestershire British National Party held its first meeting in its own right last month.

Over fifty members and supporters were on hand to hear group organiser Wayne McDermott, report on the progress the Party was making in the area and plans for the future.

John Ryde spoke about the need to keep up the work between meetings, while there were reports on their work as councillors from Charnwood's Cathy Duffy and North West Leicestershire's Ian Meller.

After an interval, the main speaker was Peter Jarvis who delivered a great 40 minutes on the European Union. It was a speech about the betrayal and lies of the Labour Party and the Conservatives who have given away Britain's sovereignty to Brussels against the wishes of the British people. A raffle and the collection helped raise over £400 for the group's funds which is a good start for any fledgling BNP unit. Andy McBride is our new regional organiser for the South-East

Andy McBride: Judicious vision.

by Val Manchee

THE South East Region has undergone restructuring since Andrew McBride took the helm as Regional Organiser just after Christmas.

Each county in the region now has a Shire Organiser to oversee and assist group organisers in their sector. Existing branches and groups continue to grow and in the last month alone a new group has been launched in East Sussex and another has been revived. The Region has a small executive committee, each member with specific areas of responsibility, including a Press Liaison Officer, Tim Rait, who has already proven his worth.

An on-line newsletter has been launched to keep the membership briefed on developments in the region. Andrew is keen on Skype conferencing on the Internet and this will work well once officials familiarise themselves with it. It is never easy to bring about change but Andrew McBride's judicious vision of returning more responsibility to the counties has proved popular.

Geoff Dickens takes over the reins in the East Midlands

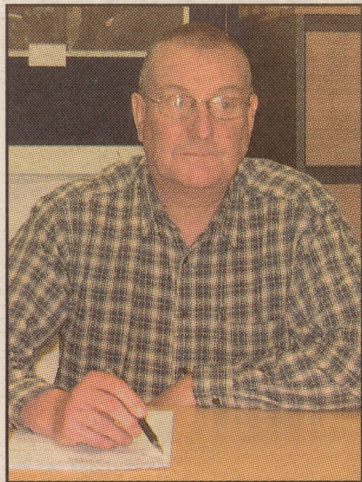

WHEN Geoff Dickens accepted the post of East Midlands Regional Organiser, his first job was to consult with tried and trusted colleagues in the region to identify the areas that needed improving.

"There was a worry that new local officials were not getting the support and back-up they needed so we implemented a mentor scheme where by an experienced official helps them in the early days," Geoff told Freedom.

"Some units were struggling with fund-raising, so a team was set up to come-up with ideas for raising money while others needed help for contesting elections so we organised a training day dealing with preparing a mail merge and collating canvass returns.

"We are launching a new email regional newsletter in an effort to involve members in our more remote areas and to encourage BNP members across the region whose talents are not being utilised to come forward. In order to strengthen and extend the Party infrastructure in the East Midlands we need to capitalise on all the expertise that we have available to us," he said.

BNP sets up Scottish Office

THE SCOTTISH OFFICE: Regional Scottish officials discuss the way forward for the BNP.

THERE is now a new British National Party Scottish Office to support the development of Scotland's new regional structure and these are the officials who will oversee the promotion of the BNP in Scotland:

Gary Raikes (Scottish Secretary and Youth Organiser), Elsie Jones (Treasurer), David Fordyce (Press Officer), Paul Johnson (Publicity), Mike Sweet (Education) and John Robertson (Security).

A new Scottish BNP web site run by Paul Johnson has been set up to reflect the fact that Scotland is a country in its own right and not merely a region of Britain.

According to Scottish Secretary Gary Raikes, the first aim of the six Regional Organisers is to raise the profile of the BNP in Scotland in a positive way.

"They are now busy contacting all members to confirm those willing to become active and encouraging those living in small communities across every region to leaflet their home area with local patriot leaflets designed by the publicity officer and printed by the Scottish Office."

"We are encouraging members to get involved in local issues and to become a vital part of their community," Gary told Freedom.

"We want them to set up regular Freedom papersales and to become known as the local friendly face of the BNP. The Regional Organiser will be on hand for support and advice as will the Scottish Office and the website for the promotion and publicity of all of the regional activities."

There's a wealth of experience amongst the Regional Organisers covering Mid Scotland & Fife, Lothian, Central, West, South and Glasgow with John McGuire who served seven years in the Royal Navy at the helm in Mid Scotland & Fife and writer and artist Bea Kaye, taking charge in the South of Scotland.

Not surprisingly Army Cadet Force Sergeant Major Instructor Gary Raikes, has a no nonsense approach to establishing the British National Party as the new political force in Scotland.

"Quite simply we need strong clear leadership and that doesn't come from going down the path of endless meetings, focus groups, sub-groups and other huge money wasting exercises that take forever to come to some sort of decision.

"The right people in the right jobs making the right decisions is what this Party needs and I believe we are at last getting to that stage," he said.

Nottingham BNP tackles company's anti-BNP bias

FLEUR WHITE: The BNP's organiser in Nottingham.

WHEN a website called www.easyfundraising.org.uk announced that any organisation or group could register a 'cause' to which sympathisers could donate dividends earned from online shopping, Nottingham BNP applied.

With big names such as the AA, Sainsburys, Amazon, Dixons, Curries, Dorothy Perkins and Churchill Insurance involved in the scheme, Nottingham BNP organiser Fleur White, saw it as an opportunity to raise funds for the Party, especially as more than a dozen Conservative Associations were registered on the scheme. But Nottingham BNP's registration was refused with the website replying:

"Thank you for your registration with easyfundraising. At this time we are unable to progress your application any further." This seemed like deliberate anti-

"I shall be taking it up with trading standards"

BNP bias to Nottingham BNP, so Fleur wrote to the company concerned reminding it that it was illegal under the Provision of Services, Goods and Facilities Act to prevent people with perceived beliefs, including philosophical ones, from accessing services and asking them to explain their reasons for not processing the application. "The website clearly stated that any organisation or group could register, yet we have been singled out for a refusal," Fleur told Freedom.

"I am unhappy about this and I have told the company that if this matter is not resolved to my satisfaction I shall be taking it up with trading standards."

Alert the public to the pending EU dictatorship

by Mike Whitby

THE Labour, Conservative and the Liberal Democrat parties are led by pro-Europeans who do the European Union's bidding and ignore the wishes of the electorate.

All three main political parties say the same thing on the issue of Europe and that's why voting for them doesn't make any difference.

- The European Union has at its heart a Constitution that makes it a dictatorship, implementing laws that make it a police state.

- Once The Queen has signed the sixth and final EU Treaty in June THIS YEAR, the EU Constitution makes it clear that its goal is to abolish the individual nations of Europe.

- Such an action is illegal under British Law. Four Prime Ministers and the Queen have committed five acts of Treason by signing the five EU treaties which will abolish our nation and replace it with rule from Brussels.

- The European Union harms Britain's economy. We lose

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT: It will dictate to our House of Commons what can and can't be done when looking after the interests of the British people.

£30billion a year trading with Europe when before we joined our balance of payments broke even. The EU's 111,000 regulations cost us £100billion a year.

- If you have voted Labour, Conservative or Liberal Democrat over the last 34 years you have voted for the promotion of the European Union and for the abolition of your own Party.

- The final "Reform Treaty" will enforce the EU Constitution on us from 1st January 2009 and from that date any independent decisions made by our politicians will have to be ratified by the European Parliament.

Only the British National Party will defend Britain's independence and take Britain out of the European Union.

STRAIGHT TALKING

Race or Class

WHEN Bob Crow appeared on BBC2's Newsnight programme to discuss the alienation felt by the white working class, in which our own Nick Griffin managed to get across some excellent points, he rolled out the old mantra that this was a class issue and not one of race, implying that people align more with their class than with their race. He was once again proclaiming the old Marxist slogan, 'Workers of the world unite you have nothing to lose but your chains'.

History has proven this to be fanciful and nowhere is this better examined than in Niall Ferguson's excellent book, The War of the World. Here he describes periods of war and civil unrest in the 20th century and concludes that ethnicity was more important than class in such events.

One such incident was the Odessa riots in Russia, which was a spontaneous uprising which included nearly all classes of Russian society together, from barefoot beggars to chiefs of station. In the aftermath three Kiev police officers including a colonel were charged with dereliction of duty. The old idea that the Russian revolution was one of social polarisation appears to look rather doubtful - ethnic polarisation would be a much more accurate description.

In the First World War socialists hoped that soldiers would repudiate their national loyalties for the sake of international brotherhood, but this was never realised on the Western Front; and the fact that attitudes of hate could become entrenched on the Western Front between two sides whose ethnic differences were minimal showed the potential for unconstrained violence when the differences were deeper.

Bob Crow may hope that the diverse ethnic working class groups of these islands will unite in a class war, but history it seems is not on his side.

MISGUIDED: Bob Crow is living in the past if he still believes that people align more with class than by their race.

When the empire falls

ALTHOUGH there is often a feeling of sadness nowadays on returning to places we visited as children to see how they have altered, imagine how it must be for those who grew up in Africa to make such a similar trip. The author Peter Godwin described such a visit when he returned to Lourenco Marques now known as Maputo.

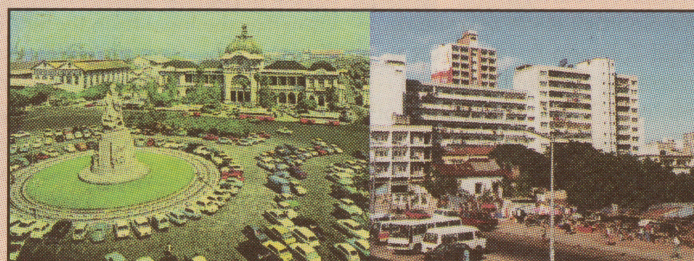

Growing up in landlocked Rhodesia, Lourenco Marques in Mozambique was where his family would go for their seaside holiday. On returning twenty years later, after the Portuguese had left he discovered a vastly different place.

Gone was the gracious avenue of trees which led down to the sea-front, all had long ago been chopped down for firewood. A trip to the once bustling market displayed just empty stalls.

The zoo that he had loved as a child was still there but the animals had long since disappeared. All had starved to death he was told. The last to go had been the crocodile which had been kept alive by feeding it live cats and dogs. He was then startled to discover that a woman was now living with her four children in the lions' cage for which she was paying rent.

Most of the hotels there were filled with squatters and the only one he could find which still took in paying guests was severely lacking in the star department. The lift shafts were filled with rubbish and there was now no electricity to the place. As he climbed the stairs he could hear slops being thrown from the windows and he felt he was being transported back to some medieval scene.

The fall of modern empires can be likened to the fall of the Roman Empire: the retreat to the motherland with the barbarians at the gate. The difference today is that the barbarians at our gates are from the Third World and not Europe, and that will make the fall of the Roman Empire appear more like a minor inconvenience in the passage of time compared with what is to come.

THEN & NOW: Lourenco Marques (left) now known as Maputo.

Do swan eaters really enrich our culture?

MIGRANT workers have turned the banks of the River Lea at Paddock Community Nature Park, near Tottenham Hale into their own personal campsite.

When a reporter from the London Evening Standard visited the park, he found tents surrounded by rubbish and dozens of old car batteries.

PROTECTED: From everything accept migrant workers.

The newspaper was responding to an angler who had contacted them to report that those living at the campsite were killing the local swans to eat.

He had seen a man cooking a swan carcass and next to him was a stack of swan wings. There was a bin bag with another two dead swans on top of it.

As swans are a protected bird anyone who kills one risks six months in prison, so the angler contacted the police but they didn't seem interested and didn't send anyone to investigate.

But what about the old car batteries you may ask? The angler had his own take on that:

"Maybe they are stripping them apart for the lead, or perhaps they are tipping the acid in the water to kill the fish," he told the Evening Standard.

Not guilty m'lud - boom boom

JUST when we thought that things could not get any more bizarre, a complaint has been made to Northamptonshire Police alleging "racism" on a programme featuring children's favourite fox, Basil Brush.

The offending episode showed a gypsy woman trying to sell heather and clothes pegs.

Joseph Jones, the vice chairman of the Southern England Romany, Gypsy and Irish Traveller Network, said: "This sort of thing happens quite regularly, stereotypical comments about us in words that we find racist or offensive."

The police have confirmed that the incident is being investigated as "an incident of racist nature".

It beggars belief that this investigation will take up valuable police time when for many 999 calls, police officers if they attend at all, do not do so until the following day.

HE'S DER MAN: African villagers will no doubt dance with delight at the news that Gordon Brown has given them £800million of British taxpayers' money.

Rural Britain faces cuts to fund African villages

THE Labour Government is switching its environmental funding plans from supporting British farming and investing in rural areas to footing the bill for 'eco-projects' in Africa.

Gordon Brown, who last month praised British farmers for their "ingenuity, marketing and innovation", has now slashed the funding for the agency tasked with marketing UK produce overseas by a fifth - leaving a £1million black hole.

According to figures released by Defra, fisheries will also see a drop in funding along with Keep Britain Tidy, Natural England and the waste reduction and recycling agency.

Food for Britain - which works to boost Britain's £1.5billion food export market - will see its funding fall by 20 per cent to just £4million, half of what it was six years ago.

The allocation for Natural England is to be cut by £5million so the agency tasked with safeguarding the countryside and coastline will have to reduce the number of its projects and cut its staff. The RSPB warns that this will effect its efforts to reverse the decline of many birds including skylarks, lapwings and stone-curlews.

The conservation charity said another £300million was needed to implement the biodiversity action plans that would ensure the survival of at-risk species.

The budget announcement for 2008-09 comes after Defra's permanent secretary Helen Ghosh, told a committee of MPs in November last year that savings of between £130 million and £270million were needed to meet new ministerial priorities.

And these new ministerial priorities are not in Britain but in Africa with £800million taken from British environmental projects and spent on "tackling environmental challenges in developing countries".

VILLAGES AT HOME: Ignored by New Labour.

EU fails to sink Yorkshire Belle

YORKSHIRE BELLE: On her way to Scarborough

by Trisha Scott

NOT content with taking over many functions of the government of these islands, the European Union is also hell bent on interfering with our leisure activities.

Last year saw Brussels impose a ban on the Scarborough pleasure cruiser "Coronia" from taking tourists from that resort to Whitby, several miles along the coast. This ban is still in place, despite protests, a petition from residents and visitors, and the devastating effect on the business of the boat's owners.

A similar situation exists also in the resort of Bridlington, where the owners of the pleasure cruiser Yorkshire Belle, face an EU imposed ban on sailings to Scarborough, which will apply from this summer.

Thankfully the trips this Easter were unaffected after the Maritime and Coastguard Agency stepped in and granted permission for them to go ahead. They were able to do this because the EU had not responded to the application from the boat owners.

Britain was once the greatest seafaring nation in the world. Now, due to the treachery of successive governments, she is reduced to going cap in hand to unelected bureaucrats in Brussels for leave to take our pleasure boats and fishing boats to sea.

Immigration at current levels is turning Britain into a country very ill-at-ease with itself. The fundamental conflict between modern Western societies and modern Islamism is documented here by discussing the writings of key Islamists, past and present, including Osama bin Laden. The evidence raises many questions and challenges for both Muslims and non-Muslims.

IRAQ - 5 years on: Sacrificed for nothing

FIRST they made them wear headscarves, then it was the burqa. They were stopped from going outside and those who had a job were attacked and beaten to stop them working. One hundred were murdered last year alone, just for 'dishonouring' Islam.

That is the nightmare that women have to live with in Basra today, the southern Iraqi city 'liberated' by British troops five years ago. 4,000 British soldiers are still there, but not in Basra itself, they are camped out on an airfield miles out from the city. So while Islamic fanatics terrorise the population, our troops' sole contribution to keeping the peace in Basra is to train soldiers for the Iraqi army. For that privilege they suffer rocket attacks every day and have to live in desperate conditions.

One hundred and seventy five British soldiers have died in Iraq and thousands have been left scarred for life with wounds or by psychological trauma. And for what? To allow Islamic radicals, once kept in check by Saddam Hussein, to openly attack and murder women and take Basra back into the dark ages.

This is the legacy of the Iraq War the British people have been left with. Lost lives, wasted lives and ruined lives - all for nothing. Labour and the Conservatives sent our young men and women to war on a lie. A war the British people were told was necessary because Saddam Hussein had weapons of mass destruction and was intent on using them against us.

There were no weapons of mass destruction and never had been. Our Parliament sent our troops to war for one reason and one reason only - because America wanted regime change in Iraq and our politicians were too pathetic to stand up to George Bush and say "no".

There is British blood on the hands of the Labour Government and the Tory 'opposition' and they must be made to pay for every life lost and every family that has been left grieving for the son or daughter that won't be coming home.

Make your anger known through the ballot box at the GLA and local council elections on Thursday May 1st.

Betrayed by cowards

AND SO, as the traitors in the Westminster House of Commons prepare to consign the destiny of our country to the tyrants of the European Union, we see that it was all for nothing...

For nothing the courage shown at Trafalgar and Waterloo.

For nothing the hell of the trenches of 1914-18.

For nothing the valour of those who stormed the Normandy beaches.

For nothing the squandered blood of doomed youth.

For nothing their finest hour - just to see, at the long story's end, that which could not, in 1000 years, be taken by force, surrendered at the hands of cowards.

May the ghostly faces of the battalions of Our Glorious Dead forever haunt the nightmares of those who have betrayed them.

Mr K. B. Trott, Romford.

BBC discriminates

I TELEPHONED the BBC complaints line on 08700 100 222 the other morning to say that in my opinion BBC News discriminates against Englishmen.

As far as I can see the news readers and reporters are either Black, Asiatic, female, Welsh, American or Irish and I told them that I feel as if I am watching the news in a foreign country!

In my country of "ENGLAND" (and I am sure the people of Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland feel the same) I want the vast majority of the BBC staff to be firstly White and then almost 50% White English Men and 50% White English Women.

Why do the "BBC" try to make me feel like a foreigner in my own land? If I watch the news when I am abroad, for example in Uganda, Papua New Guinea or Haiti, the news readers are black because it's their country. Why do White Englishmen have to be made to feel that they are surplus to requirements?

Roll on the day when we pay for the "BBC" as we do with "SKY" - subscribe if you want to and if not, don't pay!

Letters to the Editor - freedom@bnp.org.uk

Overrun in Barking

I WAS bitterly disappointed with BBC2's programme All White in Barking.

I had been expecting to see a documentary about this borough showing what it is really like to live here. Instead it was a fabricated and unrepresentative view of life.

The reality is very different. We are overrun with Africans and as soon as a White family moves out, more of them come in.

The programme should have showed what people in the borough really think of this immigrant invasion but probably the producers were unable to because White people are scared to come forward and speak their mind on camera in case they are branded 'racist'.

I can't wait for the elections when the British National Party will get another huge vote in the borough.

L. Smith, Barking.

The hypocrite

ONCE again the Chinese are using their army to silence brave Tibetans protesting at the colonisation of their country.

The protests are about the "ethnic swamping" of Tibet by large numbers of Han Chinese - a deliberate policy by Beijing.

Does this strike a chord? A once proud and independent country is deliberately swamped with millions of newcomers who do not share its culture, history, traditions or religion and whose only aim is to reduce the indigenous people to second-class status?

And all this is facilitated by a clique of quisling politicians and administrators prepared to do the will of the incomers.

How hypocritical of Gordon Brown and our New Labour masters to pretend to call China to account for its 'human rights' abuses when they are attacking and swamping the British people in precisely the same way!

John Maddox, London.

Old Labour's mantle

IT IS hardly surprising that White working-class boys are being consigned to the educational scrapheap when the Labour Party, which was once their champion, has so comprehensively turned its back on them.

Labour's initiatives to tackle under-achievement in school are centred solely on improving the performance of the ethnic minorities which is why the lowest attaining section in education in Britain today are white working-class boys.

The media should be highlighting the problem of White working class boys, who not only suffer in education by also in the jobs market where they face unfair competition from migrant workers, but it isn't - apparently this is for fear of lending weight to the arguments of the British National Party.

The Labour Party has betrayed Britain's working class but that doesn't matter any more because there's a new Party in our political arena which is taking over the mantle of Old Labour - and that's the BNP.

Arthur Latchford, Birmingham.

Open border policy

THE number of immigrants convicted of drink-driving related offences in Cornwall has more than doubled in the past four years.

That's according to our local newspaper, The Cornishman, which was prompted to make further investigations after a spate of crashes in the county involving foreign drivers.

After obtaining the latest figures using the Freedom of Information Act, our local newspaper found that migrant workers from Poland committed the most offences.

This certainly shows the effect of the 'open border policy' even on a rural county like Cornwall.

James Wallis, Penzance.

From 'Airline' to a British National Party councillor

The Cathy Duffy Story - Part 2

LAST month Cathy told us of her time at Britannia Airways, starring in Airline and her work for charity. Here she tells us of her role on Charnwood Council.

IN May 2007 I was elected as a British National Party councillor to serve the best interests of the residents of East Goscote ward on Charnwood Borough Council.

My job is to raise any issues that affect the community directly with the council and work towards resolving them. This could be anything from fine-tuning the details of large scale planning applications to the opening hours of the village pub.

I have a wide range of duties which include representing the interests of the community, whilst taking a broader view of the needs of the borough as a whole and I participate in the decision making process.

I am on the Licensing Committee, the Regulatory Committee and the Performance & Audit Scrutiny Committee which acts as the Council's 'audit committee'.

This also includes the approval of the annual statement on internal control and reviewing and monitoring risk management issues. I have to monitor performance across the range of council services and recommend action when there's under performance as well as ensuring that services are performing in support of the front-line.

I am also on the Great Central Railway & Council Liaison Panel as well as covering for a Lib-Dem councillor on the Highways Forum. I, of course, attend the Full Council Meetings at the Town Hall every 6 weeks and the Parish Council once a month.

I have to be accessible to the local people, which I am via the telephone, post, e-mail, my own council website, the local village magazine, leaflets and of course the open surgeries that I hold on the last Saturday of every month. I also attend any civic functions that arise.

A few days after my election, the Council began to run induction courses, which I have found to be extremely helpful. I had initially been worried as to what kind of reception I would receive, but I just held my head high and got on with the job. As it turned out the council officer's have been friendly and helpful.

It has been a bit of a whirlwind since my election, but I am happy that my new role puts me once again in a position to help people. It is my aim to look after my constituents to the best of my ability and at the same time help the British National Party progress along its road to increased political influence.

IT was a last minute decision for Rugby BNP to contest the Warwickshire County Council by-election for Lawford & New Bilton ward.

BACK in May of last year the British National Party didn't have the organisation or activists to be able to contest a single local council election in Middlesbrough.

But on 13th March the BNP contested two by-elections in the borough on the same day and scored over 10% of the vote, which illustrates just how far the Party has come on in the past 10 months.

In Marton West Ward, BNP candidate Kevin Broughton took 10.8% of the vote. He is married with two sons and works in the local textile industry. SATISFIED: Howard Studley, the BNP candidate in Marlborough ward.

Assembly elections on 1 May, it was just a local activist effort in Marlborough ward, consisting of a single election leaflet.

The ward was far from a BNP heartland and never campaigned in before by the BNP, but given that the Party now has a keen and active unit in the area, and had stood in the previous by-election in nearby Canon's ward, it was decided that we would stand here to reassure Londoners living in the area that the BNP was here to stay to protect their interests.

After the Friday morning count BNP candidate Howard Studley, announced that he was satisfied with his 4.1% vote and to have beaten the Greens whose vote in London appears to have collapsed. This by-election showed that even in the most unpromising corners of London, and even without making any effort, our vote in the capital is on the increase.

You can give your 2nd mayoral vote to Boris!

THE British National Party hit all the headlines when it called on supporters to give their second-preference votes in the London mayoral election to the Conservative candidate, Boris Johnson.

In a press statement, the BNP advised people to award its own mayoral candidate, Richard Barnbrook, their first-choice vote, and "the Tory clown Johnson" their second because he was the lesser of two evils.

"Our suggestion is that you hold your nose and cast it in favour of the Conservative candidate, Boris Johnson. This is not because we think that Johnson would be any good as mayor - he is as politically correct as any of the other candidates and has no real ties to London - but because he wouldn't be actively bad in the way that Livingstone is."

Asylum seekers and illegal immigrants come to our country and get everything handed to them on a plate. They get priority on housing, welfare benefits, and to the front of the NHS queue and millions of pounds in other benefits.

The British National Party, and millions of normal folks like us have had enough. We don't want anything reduced or a hand-out for our own people. We want British people to be able to get on in life. No say 'NO' to Immigration Enough is enough - this country is full. More people means more crime, more poverty, more unemployment, more strain on the NHS and even more tax rises. The BNP would close the floodgates.

We say 'YES' to More Police

Crime is on the rise but where are all the police? They're either on their backs or being hit by the streetside waiting to catch and tax motorists. Let's get them back on the beat and make our streets safe again.

We say 'YES' to Lower Taxes

The BNP would raise the threshold for paying income tax to £15,000 a year to reduce the burden on hardworking British families. That's what we need to get the economy back on track and create jobs.

Don't Forget to Vote Leaflet A5 Council Election Leaflet A5

THE BRITISH National Party's publicity department has produced three new items for the forthcoming local elections which have been designed by Mark Collett and his team.

All candidates, election agents, organisers and activists are encouraged to make use of this highly effective and eye-catching election material to help propel our Party to victory.

The first is a 'Don't forget to Vote' leaflet in A5 format which costs £12 per thousand. These are for delivery on polling day to the 'yes' and 'maybe' voters on your canvass returns.

The second is a supplementary A5 leaflet which costs £12 per thousand and is to be put out in addition to the personalised election address. It's an ideal warm-up leaflet for all wards.

The third is a new BNP calling card - ideal for not-at-home canvassing or just handing out in the high street, at work or to sympathetic neighbours. These cost £10 per thousand.
